
OPA members elected Shultz as president at the OPA Convention on June 7, 2012, at the Reed Center in Midwest City, Okla. Shultz, who succeeds Rusty Ferguson as president, will serve a one-year term.

Jeff Mayo, associate publisher and general manager of the Sequoyah County Times, was elected to a one-year term as vice president. Gracie Montgomery, co-publisher of The Purcell Register, was re-elected to a second one-year term as treasurer.

Ted Streuli, managing editor of The Journal Record, was elected to a three-year term as a board director. Others directors are Jeff Funk, Enid News & Eagle; Robby Trammell, The Oklahoman; Dayva Slpitzer, Sayre Record & Beckham County Democrat; Brian Blansett, Shawnee News-Star, and Mike Brown, Neighbor News. Ferguson, publisher of The Cleveland American, will serve a one-year term as past president. Mark Thomas is executive vice president of the association.

“This is a very challenging time for Oklahoma newspapers,” said Shultz.

“We are annually being threatened with changes in postal service, elimination of legal notices and advances in technology.

“It takes heroic efforts by newspapers to protect the public’s right to public notices as well as covering the local news that’s so important to our readers.”

Shultz grew up in the newspaper business. His parents, Charles and Helen Shultz, owned the Beckham County Democrat in Erick, Okla.

“My first newspaper job was killing out galleys and pouring pigs for the Linotype machine. I burned my hair several times in that melting room.”

His journalism experience includes stints as managing editor for the Perkins Journal and the Woods County Enterprise in Waynoka; assistant managing editor for the Midwest City Sun; publisher of the Guymon Daily Herald and publisher of the Pauls Valley Daily Democrat.

On Aug. 1, 2008, Shultz and his wife, Nanette, purchased the Maysville News and Stratford Star from Kenneth and Lottie Wood and merged both papers into one publication – The Garvin County News Star.

Jeff Shultz is a past president of the Pauls Valley Chamber of Commerce; was the 2007 Pauls Valley Citizen of the Year and the 2012 Pauls Valley Corporate Citizen of the Year; is a charter member of the Pauls Valley Arts Council and served as PVAC President for two years.

He is a current member of the Pauls Valley Recreation Committee and has served on the Pauls Valley Foundation for Academic Excellence, the Kiwanis Board of Directors and the Pauls Valley United Fund Board of Directors.

“Coming from a town that has the only toy museum in the world solely dedicated to hero action figures, I thought it would only be fitting to make the theme of my presidency ‘Newspaper Heroes,’” said Shultz.

Summer issues of Oklahoma Daily resume printing

A decision to suspend the summer print edition of The Oklahoma Daily has been reversed.

The University of Oklahoma’s student publication previously announced that it would scale back the print product this summer to experiment with online advertising and readership. The plan was to suspend the weekly print newspaper for four issues in July and resume printing in August.

OU Student Media Department officials reversed the decision after the OU Student Affairs Division offered to donate $4,000 to the department to be used in a yearlong study to imagine the future of student media on campus.

Student Media Director Brian Ringer said the department plans to launch the yearlong study in August.

University officials heard from “a small but vocal number of Daily supporters” who were concerned about The Daily’s decision to drop the last four print editions of the summer, said Judy Gibbs Robinson, secretary for the Student Media Publications Board.

Student Media should wait until its study is completed before recommending any changes, said Susan Sasso, associate vice president of Student Affairs and associate dean of students.

Joe Foote, dean of the Gaylord College of Journalism and Mass Communications, said that it’s not surprising that people care and value The Daily.

“There is a variety of perspectives with any policy change. Strong feedback is validation of its importance as a communication vehicle and as a training ground for journalists,” Foote said.
Hello fellow newspaper heroes.

Since I live in Pauls Valley, which is the home of the world’s only toy museum dedicated to action figures, I thought the theme of my presidential year would be “Newspaper Heroes.”

Each month in this column I’ll be discussing the various issues concerning the Oklahoma Press Association as well as introducing you to some of the real life newspaper heroes that have inspired others and me.

Now before I start with this first column, I’d like to explain the column head a little to you.

Kevin Stark, creator and author of the GEEZER comic strip that appears in the Garvin County News Star each week, drew the image of the superhero in the header.

Geezer, you see, is the world’s oldest geriatric superhero, who got his powers when a group of aliens sent rocketets to Earth that gave normal human beings superpowers.

Kevin was kind enough one time to include me in his comic strip as “The Editor.” My superpower is the ability to grow to a giant size and impose the “power of the press” on evildoers.

So, my thanks to Kevin for allowing me to use his “Editor” creation in my column.

I’d like to begin this first column by introducing you to two newspaper heroes of my own, my parents, Charles and Helen Shultz.

Mom and Dad were owners and publishers of the Erick Beckham County Democrat from 1965 to 1994. When Dad died in 1994, Mom ran the paper for three more years until selling it to Brad and Davya Spitzer of Sayre.

The lessons my parents taught me while growing up in the newspaper business have impacted my life and career.

They were extremely active in their community, volunteering for many projects and events in Erick.

Both of them helped create a new festival in Erick – the Honey Festival – and they served on the Erick Chamber of Commerce, the Erick Lions Club and many other organizations because they believed in making their community a better place.

When I told Dad I wanted to have a career in the newspaper industry, he gave me two valuable pieces of advice.

“First,” he said, “you put out the best paper you know how to. And if you’re happy with it, then to hell with everyone else. You’ll learn quickly you can’t please everyone.”

But it was the second bit of wisdom that has impacted my life the most.

“A newspaper,” he said, “is like a mirror. When you look in the mirror you not only see what’s good about your appearance, but you also see what changes need to be made.

“The same goes for a community newspaper. A newspaper should show both the good about a community but also should reveal what changes need to be made to make the community better.”

I’m sure all of us in the newspaper business, no matter how large or small our papers may be, can look back on someone who was our hero and recall with delight the valuable lessons they taught us.

CONGRATULATIONS to OPA staff member Jennifer Gilliland. Jennifer is the recipient of the Excellence in Communications and Publications Award from the Oklahoma Society of Association Executives (OSAE).

OPA Executive Vice President Mark Thomas and Member Services Director Lisa Potts nominated Jennifer for the prestigious award.

In his nomination letter, Mark wrote, “Jennifer Gilliland is a consummate association professional dedicated to our members, her co-workers and the betterment of the industry we love.”

A hearty AMEN to Mark’s words.

Jennifer received her award on July 9 during the OSAE’s Annual Meeting in Clinton.

When you get a chance, drop her an email and congratulate her on a job well done.

I HOPE EVERYONE HAS RUN, or will be running, the series of ads on the importance of printed public notices.

Mark has fought the battle over public notices at the Capitol for years and hopefully these PSA ads will raise enough civic awareness on how important printed public notices are.

Thanks to the OPA Creative Staff for their hard work in producing such high quality, professional ads for us to publish.

MARK AND I WILL BE TRAVELING to visit some of our state’s newspapers in the months ahead.

Past President Rusty Ferguson would write about his visits in each month’s Publisher and I intend to continue the tradition.

That’s it for this month. Now go out there and be a newspaper hero for your community!

Enid News & Eagle files suit to unseal records

The Enid News & Eagle filed a motion on June 26 in Major County District Court to unseal the records of a felony perjury charge filed on May 17 against Enid Attorney Eric Edwards.

Within hours of the felony being filed, presiding District Judge Ray Dean Linder sealed all records in the case, removing the proceedings from public view.

The case was posted to On Demand Court Records (ODCR), an online state court records database, but was removed within hours, including the case number.

The News & Eagle then requested an affidavit in the case from the office of Major County Court Clerk Shauna Hoffman, but that request was denied on the grounds that the case had been sealed.

Linder confirmed he sealed the records on May 17.

“That is correct, and it will remain sealed until I say it shouldn’t be sealed,” Linder said.

On June 26, OPA Attorney Michael Minnis filed two motions with the Major County District Court on behalf of the News & Eagle.

The first motion seeks to give the paper standing to intervene in the felony perjury case for the purpose of filing a motion to unseal the case records. The second motion seeks to lift Linder’s order sealing the case.

In his filing, Minnis stated the sealing of the court records violated the News & Eagle’s rights under the Oklahoma Constitution, the Oklahoma Open Records Act and the First Amendment to the U.S. Constitution.

Minnis also took issue with how the records were sealed.

“The sealing should only occur when proceeded by appropriate notice, an opportunity to object and for good and sufficient reasons,” Minnis wrote.

Minnis conceded in his motion that certain expungement statutes do allow for closing a case file but added any records sealed due to expungement would have occurred months or years after the public litigation. The records would not suddenly disappear.

Minnis also noted that all parties in the case are attorneys, adding, “If nothing else, the sealing order gives an appearance of special treatment for lawyers even if the closure was done with valid authority based on following proper procedural rules.”

Enid News & Eagle publisher Jeff Funk said the paper felt compelled to file its motions because the courts were created to be a public and open branch of the state government that is ultimately accountable to voters.

“If Oklahoma’s courts are able to charge, convict, sentence and punish people – all in secret – we should all be afraid,” Funk said.

Funk also said the sealing raised questions as to why Linder became involved and sealed the records within hours of the charge being filed against Edwards.

“It appeared the charge against Eric Edwards was assigned to a Major County judge to hear, but a judge came in from another county, took over this case immediately and sealed it,” Funk said. “Why such extraordinary behavior?”

The original felony perjury charge against Edwards allegedly stems from Edwards threatening another attorney during a divorce hearing in February and later lying about what he said.

On June 28, the Oklahoma Supreme Court assigned a new judge to hear the original felony perjury case. Grady County District Judge Richard Van Dyke will hear the case. A new district attorney also has been assigned to the case.

Garvin County News Star receives chamber award

Jeff Shultz and the Garvin County News Star received the honor of being named Corporate Citizen of the Year during the annual Pauls Valley Chamber of Commerce Banquet on June 14.

Publisher Jeff Shultz, who was named the chamber’s Citizen of the Year in 2007, said this was different because it recognized the effort of the newspaper.

“We donate ad space to chambers of commerce and others. We do a lot for the little communities in this county,” Shultz said.
Elk Citian readers now finding news in their morning mail

The Daily Elk Citian is now a morning publication featuring same-day delivery.

The new morning schedule also includes a change in print days, said Daily Elk Citian publisher Derek Manning.

The newspaper is now being published Tuesday through Saturday, with all in-town and in-county subscribers receiving the newspaper on the day of publication.

“We’re still keeping the same number of publications – five days per week,” Manning said, “we’re simply rolling those days forward to Tuesday through Saturday, which will benefit our readers and advertisers with a true weekend newspaper.”

Manning said a morning newspaper allows readers to choose when and where they sit down to read it.

“This approach, combined with our already strong Internet presence on TheDailyElkcitian.com, our e-edition, our Facebook page and our Twitter feeds, will ensure that our readers have whatever local news experience they need whenever they want it,” said Manning.

“We’re always looking for innovative ways to improve our service. We believe our readers and advertisers will benefit from these changes.”

Cleveland County mug shots being released to Transcript

For the first time since May, the Cleveland County Sheriff’s Office is providing The Norman Transcript with inmate mug shots.

The change was made after Sheriff Joe Lester requested that District Attorney Greg Mashburn reevaluate the county’s legal opinion on the release of the photos.

“The law in the state of Oklahoma, there’s nothing that precludes the release of the information,” Mashburn said. “There’s nothing that says you have to give it over. There’s nothing that says you don’t.”

The Oklahoma Open Records Act states that law enforcement agencies must release certain records, including jail registers.

The act defines jail registers as information inclusive of an inmate’s date of and reason for incarceration, the name of the booking authority, a description of the inmate and the date and reason for release.

The act does not specifically discuss mug shots.

Law enforcement agencies can deny access to records that are not listed in the act unless a court deems they are in the public interest.

According to Mashburn, the release of mug shots comes down to a “discretion call” for Lester.

Mashburn’s opinion overrides the earlier opinion of former Assistant District Attorney David Batton, who was fired on June 22 for undisclosed reasons.

Mashburn said that opinion was based on a 10th Circuit federal opinion interpreting the Freedom of Information Act.

In that February decision the 10th Circuit ruled that the U.S. Marshals Service had the right to deny mug shots of pretrial inmates to the Tulsa World.

Mashburn said since that ruling focused on a federal law enforcement agency, the decision should not impact operations of state agencies.

Oklahoma Supreme Court denies stay

A motion for a stay seeking to reverse an 11th Judicial District Court’s ruling that allowed the release of a surveillance video revealing alleged police brutality has been denied by the Oklahoma Supreme Court.

All justices concurred with the ruling.

District Attorney Kevin Buchanan sought relief from the state’s highest court after District Court Judge Curtis DeLapp issued an order in March to the Bartlesville Police Department to release the videotape to the newspaper.

The surveillance footage was sought by the Bartlesville Examiner-Enterprise in their investigation into an incident involving four police officers and a combative patient at a Bartlesville hospital. The Examiner-Enterprise ultimately sued the City of Bartlesville, the Bartlesville Police Department and the district attorney for the footage.

The newspaper released the video online on March 18.

The Oklahoma Press Association Board of Directors met June 7, 2012, at the Reed Center in Midwest City, Okla.

Attending were President Rusty Ferguson, The Cleveland American; Vice President Jeff Shultz, The Garvin County News Star, and Treasurer Gracie Montgomery, The Purcell Register. Directors attending were Past President Rod Serfoss, Clinton Daily News; Jeff Mayo, Sequoyah County Times; Jeff Funk, Enid News & Eagle; Robby Trammell, The Oklahoman; Dayva Spitzer, Sayre Record & Beckham County Democrat; Brian Blanett, Shawnee News-Star, and Mike Brown, Neighbor News. Attending as a guest was director-nominee Ted Strueil, The Journal Record. Staff was Mark Thomas, Executive Vice President/Secretary; Lisa Potts, Member Services Director, and Michael Minnis, OPA Attorney.

After calling the meeting to order, Ferguson asked the board to review the minutes of the March 29, 2012, meeting. The minutes were approved as presented.

The board acknowledged OPA and LSP financial statements, a consolidated summary and investment reports for the period ending April 30, 2012. Year-end projections for OPA and LSP in 2011-2012 also were reviewed.

The board reviewed the current list of 45 sustaining members and 12 associate members. Thomas said for-profit sustaining members pay annual dues of $400; non-profit sustaining members pay $200 and associate members pay $65.

In preparation for mailing dues invoices for the 2012-13 fiscal year, Thomas said staff is confirming full-page ad prices. Invoices will reflect the board’s decision to bill one-third of the dues increase this year.

ACTIVITY REPORTS

In activity reports, Potts reviewed the pre-convention report and registration numbers. Attendance was slightly down, in part due to college students being unable to attend during summer months and summer vacations at newspapers.

Thomas reviewed the status of 26 bills at the conclusion of the legislation session, which he said was successful.

In the LSP Committee review, Brown said there is only one active legal defense and that the committee will review language about defense of invasion privacy. Minnis said approximately 30 LSP inquiries are received per month with responses delivered via phone, mail or email.

OTHER BUSINESS

In other business, Thomas said OPA-MEBT Trustees are working on final arrangements for dissolution of the trust and will inform the OPA Board when any outstanding issues have been resolved.

Shultz referred the board to a list of committee assignments and a calendar of board meetings and events for 2012-13. Shultz said the theme for his presidential year is newspaper heroes, which reflects the Toy and Action Figure Museum in his hometown of Pauls Valley.

Before adjourning, Ferguson thanked Serfoss for his many years of service to OPA and OPS.

OPS BOARD MEETING

At the Oklahoma Press Service board meeting, minutes of the March 29, 2012, meeting were approved as presented.

OPS financial statements for the period ending April 30, 2012, were reviewed and Thomas said he expects OPS to end the year with a profit.

Staff reports included:

- Discussion of upgrading the OPS ad software to include online ad placement and teatsheet coordination.
- Review of the did-not-run advertising report for January to May 2012, which showed 54 newspapers missed 102 ads for a total of $39,940.
- Oklahoma Tourism & Recreation Department’s suspension of its trade agreement for at least one year. Thomas said 32 members participated in this year’s trade agreement and that the state department is planning a strategic campaign for newspaper advertising.

Sports writer joins staff at McAlester

Matt Goisman, a sports writer from Boston, joined the staff of the McAlester News-Capital this month.

Goisman is a recent graduate of Boston University’s journalism master’s program where he obtained a Master of Science in editorial journalism with a concentration in sports journalism.

Goisman attended Wesleyan University for his undergraduate degree, receiving a Bachelor of Arts in religion.

Goisman’s work has been published in the Boston Globe; the Globe’s website, Boston.com; Somerville Patch and Sports of Boston.

He says he has written about sports ranging from little league baseball to underwater hockey.

“Matt’s already hit the ground running, and I expect that momentum will build as he meets our area coaches, players and sports fans,” said Examiner-Enterprise Executive Editor Kandra Wells.

Q: What’s something most people don’t know about you?
A: Here, everyone knows but you might not – I am a two-time survivor of Hodgkin’s Disease lymphoma and after first being diagnosed in 1995, have been cancer-free since 2001.

Q: What’s the best part of your job?
A: I love getting to promote our town and the people who live here.

Q: What civic activities are you involved in?
A: A couple of years ago, I backed off several organizations but I am still active in St. John’s Lutheran Church and auxiliaries, the Hooker Chamber of Commerce and the American Cancer Society Relay For Life of Texas County. Plus, I enjoy helping out other worthwhile projects with publicity.

Q: Who’s had the biggest influence on your career?
A: Harry Heath, who took an OSU freshman who literally chose advertising as a major just because she liked to make posters, and created a print media devotee. He taught me that any segment of journalism is not just a job, it’s a calling and it comes with responsibilities.

Q: What would you describe as the three most important responsibilities of your job?
A: I must avoid sensationalizing news for the sake of the headline or extra papers sold; I must write for the betterment of the community and residents; and I must inform, entertain and encourage my readers.

Q: What about newspaper publishing gets you out of bed in the morning? What makes you want to stay in bed?
A: I feel that I am performing a service and that this community would be less if I wasn’t there to take photos or take notes or take part. I need to be at home to care for my mother more hours a week.

Q: What’s the biggest obstacle you’ve overcome in your career?
A: Trying to balance time between being a single mom or an only daughter and being “ye olde editor.”

Q: What are you most proud of?
A: Although I am trying to sell the newspaper, people are always coming up to me to say, “I’m sure praying hard that you never find a buyer.” It’s a mixed blessing but it makes me think I’ve done something right.

Q: What are your hobbies?
A: Other than taking photos and taking notes wherever, I fight cancer with the American Cancer Society Relay For Life of Texas County locally and as chair of The Society High Plains Division Survivorship Workgroup of the Community Engagement Task Force. I also enjoy listening to audio Agatha Christie novels and short stories, reading and sending cards.

Q: Does your newspaper have a website?
A: No, I’m not blessed with technical skills or interest and there’s just something unique about holding newspaper in my own two hands. However, the USPS may drive me to a website soon.

Q: How does your newspaper play an important part in the community?
A: We shine the spotlight on the people who are doing amazing things and we shine the spotlight on dark corners that people need to see.

Q: What type of annual events is your newspaper involved in?
A: If it happens in Hooker or local residents are involved, we’re working on it, too, and surprisingly, there’s a lot going on in this little town.

Q: In what ways has your newspaper positively impacted the community?
A: A newspaper to a small town is like the stick that makes communities out of individuals so I believe we have helped get things done that needed to be done; we’ve helped change things that required attention and we’ve highlighted the people who worked at those things that were worth their time, talent and treasure.

Q: What challenges are facing your newspaper today and in the future?
A: The USPS and their total disregard for the need to deliver newspapers; and also my inability to give the 110% needed to do this thing right – my heart is other places now.

Q: What are some area attractions in your community visitors shouldn’t miss?
A: Anyone visiting Hooker has to stop in at the Hooker Chamber of Commerce store and pick up a few “Hooker” T-shirts like “It’s a location, not a vocation,” “Not your typical Hooker” and “Once a Hooker, always a Hooker.” And we have a great city park and recreational area featuring a modern zero-entry swimming pool, a sand volleyball pit, horseshoe pits, fenced basketball half-court, tennis courts and a brand new skate park. Once off the dreary highway, visitors praise our downtown with paved sidewalks of engraved bricks, shady trees, Pizza On Broadway and The Hooker Soda Fountain & Grill, which still sports the original “Rexall” sign from when it was a drugstore. Downtown also offers KaleidoScoops ice cream, flower shop, gift shop, antiques, nail salon, two hair salons, Hooker Health Club and more including The Hooker Advance newspaper and Christian gift/card shop. We also boast a 9-hole golf course, Jack Goosen Baseball Stadium, a great school system and 10 churches.
DEATHS

PHILLIP THOMAS COWAN, former owner and publisher of the Bethany Tribune-Review, died June 28, 2012. He was 84.

During his life Cowan was very active in his community. He served three terms as president of Bethany Chamber of Commerce, was a charter member of the Bethany Museum and Historical Society, received the Most Useful Citizen Award from the Bethany Chamber in 1980 and received the Freedom Foundation Valley Forge Award in 1981.

He was an active member of the local Kiwanis club, achieving 54 years of perfect attendance with the group as well as serving two terms as president of the Warr Acres-Putnam City Kiwanis Club and as Lieutenant Governor of the Texas-Oklahoma Kiwanis District.

Cowan was the owner and publisher of the Bethany Tribune-Review from 1957-1989.

He is survived by his daughters, Sherry Mars and Sandra Neubauer; his son, Tom Cowan; 10 grandchildren and several great-grandchildren.

OMER GILLHAM, a former reporter for the Tulsa World, died July 9, 2012, in Tulsa.

Gillham’s reputation for tenacity was revered in the Tulsa World newsroom, where he worked for 14 years.

“Omer was one of the best reporters the Tulsa World has ever had,” said World Publisher Robert E. Lorton III. “He was a tireless worker who went above and beyond to get the story right. He will be greatly missed.”

Gillham, 53, left the World in March to work on a book about his family history and growing up with alcoholism in the household.

His most recent assignment at the World was as a staff writer on the enterprise team, which produces investigative and enterprise stories and projects.

“During his 14 years at the Tulsa World, Omer Gillham worked several different news beats, but he distinguished himself as an investigative reporter,” Executive Editor Joe Worley said. “Omer was the first reporter to uncover the federal investigation into federal and city law enforcement in November 2009. He stayed with that story until March 2012. No other reporter had his understanding of how the complex corruption case unfolded.”

Gillham won numerous awards for his work, including first place in the 2010 Great Plains Journalism Awards and a 2009 award from the Mental Health Association in Tulsa.

He received a bachelor’s degree in journalism from the University of Oklahoma in 1992 after becoming a journeyman electrician. Before joining the World, Gillham worked at the Ada Evening News, The Ardmoreite and The Norman Transcript.

Gillham is survived by six sisters, Yvonne Sibley, Mary Vincent, Shirley Robertson, Melanie Gillham, Ellen Barnes and Sharel Massey, as well as Rachele Vaughan, whom he described as “the love of my life.”

JESSE RAY TURNER, who worked for the Altus Times for more than 50 years, died July 10, 2012, at his Norman home. He was 82.

Turner was born on Nov. 25, 1929, in Pickton, Texas. He attended Altus schools and Altus junior college. He married Geneva Irene Taylor on Nov. 5, 1948.

He began his newspaper career for the Altus Times-Democrat as a paperboy on Dec. 7, 1941. Over the next 50 years, he held several positions at the newspaper including press operator and production manager. He retired in 1995 as advertising sales director.

He was a member of the First Assembly of God Church in Altus and was involved in many community and philanthropic projects.

He is survived by his daughter, Linda McLennan of Norman; his son, Larry Turner and wife Ann of Edmond; three grandchildren; five great-grandchildren, and his brother David Turner and wife Iva of Altus.

FRED GORDON TURNER, longtime publisher of the McAlester News-Capital & Democrat, died June 15, 2012. He was 79.

Turner succeeded his father and grandfather at the helm of the McAlester newspaper until his retirement in 1982.

Turner’s father, Lowell Turner, was publisher of the newspaper for nearly two decades until his death in 1968. Lowell had succeeded his father-in-law, Fred Cowles, as publisher.

Fred Turner was born on July 29, 1932, in McAlester. He earned his bachelor's degree in journalism from Oklahoma State University and then served in the U.S. Army for two years.

Turner then returned to McAlester where he was part owner, publisher and mainly editor for the McAlester News Capital from 1958 to 1982. He was also editor of the Pittsburg County News and Southeast Oklahoma News and wrote for the Eufaula Indian Journal, the McIntosh County Democrat and the Lake Eufaula World from 1999 to 2000.

Turner served on the election committee of Governor George Nigh and was Nigh’s press secretary in 1981 and 1982.

He is survived by his wife Barbara Turner of the home; two daughters and sons-in-law, Terri and Dan Bragg of Mesquite, Texas, and Susan and Mark McConnell of Norman; son David Turner of Shelburne, Mass.; sister and brother-in-law Anne Turner and Rex of Oklahoma City; and three grandchildren.

This month we’re showcasing the first place Layout & Design event winners from the 2012 Oklahoma Press Association Better Newspaper Contest.

Judges praised these papers for their great use of photos, use of white space and organization.

If you’re thinking about redesigning your newspaper, or just need some inspiration, one of the best places to start is by looking at publications with good design.

Here’s what judges had to say about these award-winning publications:

A judge praised the Bartlesville Examiner-Enterprise’s typography, careful use of color and great use of photos.

“This paper has mastered clean design that is easy to navigate,” the judge wrote.

The Ardmoreite uses a nice mix of photos, stories and graphics on its front page. “I really like the inside preview bar on the side,” the judge commented.

A judge wrote that The Journal Record was “a lovely paper” with good use of white space and art. “Very clean and inviting,” the judge wrote.

If you’re looking for something that grabs attention, check out The Purcell Register. “It grabs attention with big photos and large heads,” the judge wrote. “An effort is being made to have an impact on the reader.”

A classy tabloid is how the judge referred to the Wagoner Tribune. “Outstanding page one design and use of photos, well organized, nice use of shading inside.”

The ads were “awesome” in The Piedmont Surrey-Gazette, a judge commented. In addition, sections were well defined, typefaces were complimentary and layout and design was top-notch. “A winner anywhere!” the judge wrote.

The Newcastle Pacer’s front page full of tornado coverage was excellent, a judge said. Also, good opinion page, good use of art and good divisions. “Outstanding paper.”

The Edmond Sun is very clean with good use of white space, noted a judge. “It’s very inviting to read.”

The Moore American’s front page is professional and well organized, a judge wrote.

And a judge referred to The Daily O’Collegian as “a strong paper.” “Nice, effective, clean and easy to use,” the judge wrote. “Easy to tell difference between news and features.”

Spend a few minutes looking over these featured pages. Consider what you like as well as what you’d change. Spending some time looking at good design will help you improve your skills as a designer.

“Go for the drama,” I try to teach my writing students about writing leads, whether feature or news. For those who tend to write “wooden” leads, or “bury” the leads, it often takes my editing pencil scratching out words, rearranging a few, and the use of multiple paragraph signs and inserted periods.

But it occurs to me that almost all journalism is about drama…not the fake ones like “The Real Housewives of…” show, or sensational, or manufactured.

But what are you doing when you put one story at the top of the page over another? When you make one photo larger than another? When you increase the size of a headline? You’re using your news judgment to say to your readers, “This is more important,” or “This is more interesting.” Generally, it’s because it’s bigger news – affecting more readers. I’ll bet in most cases there is action involved, because action often reflects conflict of some sort – hence drama.

What spurred these thoughts was a dramatic full-page photo in The Oklahoman. The OKC Thunder had just beaten the Miami Heat in the first game of the NBA Finals. Consuming the front page of the paper’s NBA Finals edition, wrapped around the regular front page, was this full-page photo of Russell Westbrook. It grabbed everyone who saw it. What really grabbed me was the headline, BLUE GRIT, completing a brilliant package of dramatic journalism.

I emailed managing editor Mike Shannon about who wrote that headline. Shannon replied the paper uses the Internet to ask for headline suggestions from readers during sports events. He wrote: “I am told this one came in even before the game was played. …the game went just right so the head worked. … the lesson is to engage your readers and listen to them when possible.”

No, they don’t know who the reader was, but I, like many others, have never seen anything that’s not a disaster captivating the state as the frenzy surrounding the Thunder’s success. From the largest paper to some of the smallest it was news. Consider Derek Brown’s report in the Minco-Union City Times: Headline: “Thunder falls – Support does not waver.”

The news for the team was not good four games later. Headline writers had a field day. The Oklahoman, same format as game one), “OVERHEATED”; Tulsa World, “Overwhelmed”; Enid News & Eagle, “Just too hot”; The Norman Transcript, “Heat stroke”; The Ardmoreite, “Not their time”; The Ponca City News, “It’s ‘Wait till next year’ for OKC Thunder”; Bartlesville Examiner-Enterprise, “It’s over: Swoon over Miami”; Muskogee Phoenix, “It was fun while it lasted.”

Dramatic photos fill the pages of Oklahoma papers including The Oklahoman’s “Blue Grit,” The Weleetkan’s “Make Hay while the sun shines,” Bartlesville Examiner-Enterprise’s patriotic painting at Freedom Fest and The Oklahoma Daily’s “Boren locks housing proposal.”

Others included front page photos of fans in the Stillwater NewsPress and The Shawnee News-Star.

OK, I know, you can’t have that kind of drama on meeting stories, or Rotary club elections, but the lessons are the same. Find the most interesting and lead with it.

Here’s a “Drama” checklist (or “Boring” checklist, looking at it the other way) for your pages and writing:

- Are all your headlines the same size? One should always be dominant in size and location.
- Same for photos.
- Strong verbs make headlines sizzle. Dull headlines make a boring page.
- Are your first sentences and paragraphs short?
- Are all your paragraphs the same length? Change that.
- Do you use a good quote high in the story?

Lookin’em Over: Here are examples of drama in writing:

John D. Montgomery at The Purcell Register, under “Val’s Kitchen cold”: “If you’re used to getting Greek hash browns on Saturday, smacking on some of the best ribs around or counting on tasty catfish on Fridays you’re going to have to find another haunt. / That’s because Purcell institution….”

Jerry Benson in The Lone Grove Ledger, under “Tax and spend, or is it spend and tax?”: “If you’re used to getting Greek hash browns on Saturday, smacking on some of the best ribs around or counting on tasty catfish on Fridays you’re going to have to find another haunt. / That’s because Purcell institution….”

Mandi Goforth at The Weekly Express in Westville: “The Summer Reading...”
To be more appealing, play to your strengths

By ED HENNINGER, Design Consultant

Others excel at typography.

Still others use graphics very well.

Do you know which you are? And if you do, do you use those skills to make your paper more appealing to readers?

If you have a star photographer on your staff, it’s to your benefit to create more photo packages and more photo pages to showcase her skills. Give her more opportunities — and give your readers more compelling packages as a result.

Better yet, get her involved in your weekly (or daily) and long-term planning sessions. (Do you have regular planning sessions, don’t you?) With her visual skills, she’s bound to offer more ideas for you to attract readers. Let’s assume otherwise: You don’t have that super photographer – but you do have a page designer who can take good (not great) photos and package them well with your stories to create pages that capture your readers’ attention.

So be it! If that’s the case, then have that designer help guide your newspaper’s destiny with strong input in every issue — and even stronger input in long-term editorial planning. He can help point the way by suggesting story ideas and visual approaches that will bring increased attention to your every issue.

OK, so you have neither. No star photographer, no super designer. But you do have writers. And they may be the key to your winning more readers. If, that is, you encourage good writing. No, we’re not talking about the inverted pyramid and the county sewer board meeting. But we are talking about those writers who can fashion gripping and memorable stories about your community and your readers.

I recall one newspaper I reviewed many years ago. Terrible design. But that paper had more than 95 percent penetration in its community. One of the reasons: its obituaries told the life stories of people in that town. Those weren’t obits — they were true tales of how those people lived. And loved. And were loved. And those stories were, well...memorable.

The publisher of that newspaper asked me: “Why do I need to redesign? We are the story of our community!” Why, indeed?

His point was well made...and well taken.

And my point is this: Every newspaper has a star...a light that can glow for all readers to see.

That light may be a photographer. Perhaps a designer. Maybe a writer. Or maybe even a clerk who does your accounts and can make gorgeous charts with Excel.

Whatever your light is, don’t hide it under a basket.

Open source software options to consider

Computer Notes
from the road
by Wilma Melot
wmelot@okpress.com

You never get something for nothing but open source software is as close as it comes. This is my fresh look at some of these useful programs.

If the office approves of “bugware,” as some people call open source software, give it a try and then show the boss some of the things that can be done for free. Always download from the original website that the developers set up. They work hard to give us the software so their site should get the hits for the downloads.

If the paper uses Open Office for word processing – and if there are newer in-house computers – try LibreOffice 3.5.4. LibreOffice is based on Open Office but has an interface much like Microsoft Office 2003. It works on Windows, Mac and Linux platforms.

The word processor (called Writer) has macros for automating simple, repetitive tasks in documents. It will open just about any type of word processing document.

The spreadsheet program (called Calc) cannot compare to Microsoft Excel but for most simple spreadsheet work it does a good job.

LibreOffice also has a database program and math program, but no email or calendar like Microsoft Office.

If the office needs to share files on the fly, then Google Docs is the best choice. The only time I would not advise this is if those documents contain banking or other confidential information.

Google Docs best feature is the fact that the files are always accessible no matter what device the employee is using or what location the employee is at. It works on iPhones, iPads and any computer with a web browser.

Gimp is moving forward with the latest release of 2.8 on Windows and Linux versions. Mac is still at 2.6. Gimp is looking and feeling more like Photoshop all the time.

The floating windows are gone, replaced by a single-screen working environment. It still cannot turn a photo into CMYK but it is a good, basic photo editing program. If you’re looking at Gimp for an office, I would recommend Photoshop Elements for users without a full copy of Photoshop. With its $99 price, it’s a better option than Gimp.

If you own OSX 10.5 and have a new enough computer, you can still buy the Snow Leopard OSX 10.6 disk at the Apple store and then download OSX 10.7 or buy the USB Thumb. This all may go away with the release of OSX 10.8.

Will it run on your computer? Apple says it runs on these:
- iMac (mid-2007 or newer)
- MacBook (late 2008 aluminum, early 2009 or newer)
- MacBook Pro (mid/late 2007 or newer)
- MacBook Air (late 2008 or newer)
- Mac Mini (early 2009 or newer)
- Mac Pro (early 2008 or newer)

Look on the case of the computer to see the release date and go to “About this Mac” under the Apple menu to see the model. The “More Info” button will show the serial number of the computer. To look it up, copy the serial number and paste it in Apple’s support site (http://support.apple.com/specs/) for full specs.

NEW FEATURES

Diction is the most exciting thing for me in the new OSX. It works in any program you can type in, third party or not, like email or InDesign. The other cool thing is the ability for newly released Macs with solid state drives (no moving parts) to update even when the computer is in sleep mode.

Notification Center is a new feature modeled after the Notification Center on iOS5. You can see your email, calendar (formerly iCal) reminders and more.

Apple’s Gatekeeper will still let you run third party applications but there is now a setting that can be turned on that only lets the user run Apple approved programs.

In System Preferences > Security & Privacy > General, you have three options for running software:
1. Exclusively from the Mac Apple Store
2. The Apple Store and non-Mac Apple Store developers who have registered with Apple
3. From any developer, anywhere

The Mac App Store has become the sole place for Apple software updates. When new software is available, you’ll receive a notification in “Notification Center.” You can download updates by opening the Apple Store app and selecting the Updates tab. Notifications also carry over to any Mac Apple Store apps as well, meaning that you no longer need to perennially leave the Apple Store open to check for new updates to your programs.

iCloud is really the biggest innovation and is fully functional with the new OS. You can sync content across all Apple devices: mail, calendars, contacts, reminders, documents, notes on iPad, iPhone and the computer.

Apple is changing the names and interface of some applications (with more to come) and creating an OS that is easy for iPhone/iPad-only users to sync with and feel at ease with. Hopefully, basic computer users will still have a place in the minds at Apple.

EMAIL SERVER PROBLEMS

The most asked question this month has been about mail servers at PLDI and AT&T, which changed the client email server settings for many papers.

Google took over PLDI’s email and AT&T changed almost every server to Yahoo’s mail servers. AT&T seems to change its mail server setting every few years, which could be a result of growing out of the old ones.

At any rate, it requires users to change their client programs to the new settings. The old setting works for a while, then one day just stops working with little warning.

A client email program is one that brings email messages onto the computer itself, thus giving us our own copy of the email to be stored as we wish, independent of larger servers like Yahoo. This is a good thing for messages that might have legal ramifications in the future. You will want to keep them.

I do not recommend only using web mail as I’ve seen people lose all their folders on the web mail server when it changed to a new one. In one afternoon, they lost all their important email backup.

Email clients like Outlook, Mac Mail, Thunderbird, Windows Live Mail and others all need to have POP forwarding turned on at the web server’s site. This means the user must go to a webmail site (GMail, Yahoo, etc.), sign in and then look for the setting options and turn on POP forwarding.

Look for the IMAP or POP server setting link to find the current setting for your email client on the same page as the POP forwarding settings. Then look for Accounts or Preferences in the mail client program to enter the server addresses.

Listen to your followers

That InterWeb Thing
by Keith Burgin
kburgin@okpress.com

Using Twitter at a newspaper is about more than ad sales – although that would be nice as well. The truth is, Twitter may not directly affect your bottom line much at all. Indirectly, those 140-character exchanges can bring you more than you think.

Twitter is all about conversations, exchange of information and networking. As with each of those things in the real world, it’s better to listen than to speak.

I’ll give you an example of the sort of thing that builds an information network. It’s going to sound very “Mayberry RFD,” so bear with me.

Let’s say Margaret at the corner coffee shop tweets that her dog found a hole in the fence. Butch has gone missing!

Retweet that lost dog alert! Furthermore, follow up with her two or three times over the next couple days. Use a hashtag (#) to identify the issue you’re discussing.

#LostDogAlert_Claremore @Latte_ladyM Hey Margaret, did you find your missing pup?

If not, remind everyone
#LostDogAlert_Claremore Hey folks,
@Latte_ladyM still missing her dog.
Small, mixed-breed brown & white terrier. Name is Butch.

If Butch is returned to Margaret, thank your followers whether they were involved in the find or not.

#LostDogAlert_Claremore @Latte_ladyM and Butch are reunited. Thanks to everyone who kept a lookout and responded.

Keep an eye on your Twitter stream. Folks you follow will tell that their garbage pickup is days late, detail damage to their roof during the last storm, gripe about existing issues and tip you to impending ones. You can relay silver, amber and even “brown paw” alerts. Talk about upcoming events, even mention sponsors and sales.

Occasionally, you may even find help with a story.

#Council_Poteau Anyone hear what transpired between the mayor and the council? We couldn’t hear. DM us please.

(DM is a direct message that someone you are following can send. It’s private.)

These are just examples. My suggestion is that you involve yourself with your Twitter followers. Have fun. Retweet birth announcements, graduations and other important events.

Of course, promote your print or web product, promote sponsors, local sales, etc. Just make sure you’re giving as much or more than you’re getting. If you talk about yourself too much, folks get bored and tune out.

I have a friend, an independent writer, who made about $2,500 in sales the first 24 hours after his book hit Kindle. All he had to do was let his Twitter friends know it was up and ready for sale. When someone posts that they liked the book, he retweets and says thank you.

Granted, he has over 6,000 followers but he got there through being friendly, helping folks with advice and having fun with people. Plus he’s a great storyteller.

All I can tell you is that if you’re a good community member the community will respond.

As I’ve said before, it’s not a case of “If you build it they will come.” With Twitter it’s more, “If you’ve built it, they helped.”

Secret court proceedings

Legal Notes
by Michael Minnis
OPA Attorney

Public institutions tend to gravitate towards secrecy. The secrecy is often imposed with good intentions. Nonetheless, most, if not all, of this secrecy is contrary to the openness historically and constitutionally required of public offices.

The latest manifestation of this inclination to secrecy is a case filed in Major County that is the subject of Enid News & Eagle articles and a pending motion to intervene.

Within a few hours of the filing of a criminal felony charge against an attorney, the case ceased to exist in the public domain. The case disappeared: no docket sheet, no case number, no filed documents. Fortunately, prior to closure, the Enid News & Eagle had seen and copied the docket sheet from the On Demand Court Records’ website.

The case file is still under seal and the attorneys involved in the litigation are under a gag order. The Enid News & Eagle is seeking to intervene to get the case file opened to the public.

What has been learned publicly to date is indicative of the problems inherent in closing court files to public access. The judge ordering the sealing says he was concerned that the charge may have been brought without sufficient evidentiary support and/or the blessing of the district attorney. Instead of dismissing the charge as improvidently filed, the court sealed the case and gagged the attorneys.

Because the defendant was a lawyer, this inevitably gave rise to concerns of favoritism toward lawyers. However, it also had the inevitable consequence that the judge’s motives would be under suspicion because no record existed of why the judge closed the case file, i.e., made the case disappear. If, as the defendant alleges, the charge should never have been filed then the public is being deprived of possible information about misbehavior by the district attorney’s office.

Like so many other efforts to close court records or courtrooms, the notoriety the defendant sought to avoid was exponentially increased by the closure of the case and reputations were possibly hurt unnecessarily even if the intentions were pure.

Finally, this case raises the continuing problem of secret court proceedings indicated by gaps in the numbering of court cases filed. All newspapers in every county would do their communities a great service by exposing these secret cases and opening the light of public access.

The Oklahoma Publisher // July 2012
Smiling through tears: Daddy’s home

For eight months we have planned, dreamed and waited on this day to arrive. I could feel the butterflies bouncing around inside my stomach as I marked the days off the calendar one by one. I felt anxious and a little giddy as I counted down the hours, then minutes, then seconds until his arrival.

I was excited to see my son, but I was more excited to see Delilah spend time with her dad. Then he was here. I watched as he walked towards us through the airport. I watched Delilah, who thought we were at the airport to see the planes. She turned and spotted her daddy. She stopped dead in her tracks and just looked at him with wide eyes.

This man looked like her daddy, but her daddy was in Korea. We all watched and waited.

“Hi, Punkin,” was all he said. But that was enough. Her feet grew wings as she flew across the room and jumped into Kyle’s arms. She hugged him and kissed him. She softly ran her tiny fingers over his face, all the while grinning from ear to ear. Daddy was finally home.

She clung to him as he carried her from the airport to the car. I followed behind, watching as the two of them continued to exchange looks, softly whispered their secrets to each other, then hugged some more. She willingly shared her ice cream with him when we stopped for him to grab a bite to eat.

We stood in the parking lot talking, no one wanting to say good night and go back to their own homes for a good night’s rest before gathering again for more stories and hugs.

As we all finally made our way into our vehicles, Delilah poked her head back out the door and said, “Daddy, are you coming home with me?” I caught myself as I felt the tears well up in my eyes. I couldn’t control the joy I felt as I listened to her delighted squeal when he said yes.

Although his time here is brief, the two of them are making the most of his visit. Daddy’s vacation is being spent taking Delilah to school, shopping, riding bikes and 4-wheelers. I even caught him playing Barbie dolls with her, though I doubt he will admit to this.

There are plenty of tender moments where the two of them just cuddle up to read a book or watch a movie. These are the moments that make my heart soar: watching my son and my granddaughter lovingly transition back into their same old routines.

I remember my dad traveling when I was a young girl. He was never gone for more than a couple of days, maybe three. But I can’t imagine how hard it is for young children of military parents to go about their daily lives for months at a time. They do it every day, though. Delilah has continued her routines, only stopping briefly in the evenings before bed as she waits for me to tell her it’s time to go see Daddy on the computer.

This visit for Delilah and Kyle has been wonderful to watch and I am so thankful to have been a part of their reunion. But ours is only one of the many families who are experiencing all these emotions as their loved ones return home. I pray that all their reunions are just as sweet to watch unfold.

Thank you to my son Kyle, my nephew Cody (who returned home the following week) and to all the military men and women and their families. Words cannot express how grateful I am to all of you for your sacrifices.

Thank you for continued support of “Share The Warmth”
